Importance of Alumni in an Educational Institution

Students, present, and past both are vital and unique for an institution or university. It is common to lose track of most students after they proceed on their various careers, but tracking them all would be a huge task on any institution's part. But it is essential and urgent. Why? Because they carry the institution's reputation, which relies in large part on how successful students are in the real world. This process is self-feeding as well. If an institution becomes well known for producing graduates or postgraduates that are intelligent, innovative, and effective in their fields, then its reputation will grow. New students will have better job prospects because they went to a well-known institution, and the process will continue and cumulative.

Alumni also help to maintain smooth running of the institute through funds, donations and volunteerism. It requires a lot of money to keep an institute to run on its feet, and a big chunk of that comes from alumni donations. Sometimes, large donations allow institute or universities to provide students with newer technology, better facilities, and a nicer campus—which in turn keeps universities competitive and appealing. A key factor in college and university rankings is the amount of active alumni participation in institutes or universities. This isn't surprising, considering an active alumni base generally indicates that past graduates feel like they had a quality educational experience. Attending a school with very active alumni also often encourages current students to remain involved and active after graduation, once more perpetuating a good cycle. To encourage alumni participation, universities often honour successful alumni. Keeping in close contact with, and continuing to recognize alumni for their excellence is one of the surest ways for institutes and universities to both cultivate their community , reputation, and continue to receive monetary support from alumni.
